Help for that Soldier. Editors Dispatch : In the Dispatch of April 7th is an appeal of a wounded ex-Confederate (605 China street, Oregon Hill) for help, and if facts are stated I misunderstand Virginians if he or his family is allowed to suffer. His cry ought to go out to Virginia, not to Richmond alone.

Should donations be sent to the Dispatch office for him, or be sent by mail to his address, "Wounded Ex-Confederate"? The latter plan seems to me to risk loss. I have something now for him, but don't know Rosa. what to do with it.

[Send it addressed to him at 605 China street, Oregon Hill, Richmond. Our corre spondent need not fear that his charity will be unworthily bestowed. The letter which we published was written by the wounded man himself, and indicates how competent a clerk the poor ex-soldier is.]

WESSON the Tailor, Twelfth street, WESSON the Tailor, Twelfth street,

ALEXANDRIA, April 10, 1877. Editors Dispatch: I have thought you the fountain of correct quotation, but suppose the "Lady of Lyons" too sentimental for your earnest study. It is "Blows to a French citizen, Melnotte!" and the words are spoken by Gaspar (with a G). If you had said "These are but wild and whirring words, Horatius," you would have been just as near a correct quotation. Do not destroy the confidence of one who, in all such SPHYNX. matters, depends on you. [That was, as Richard Grant White would say, a case of "heterophemy." We had heard the words uttered in the Theatre by Fechter but a month or two before we wrote "Caspar" for "Melnotte," and of course had often heard them before, and knew that they were addressed to Melnotte. We are not at all sensitive as to such mat-

Editors Dispatch: Who is the "Scotch Reviewer," H.? I thought Francis Jeffrey and Sidney Smith were dead, and minor poets allowed their peace. And, too, what close and peculiar connection has the flight of Oakey Hall and "Life has Joys," that who will send any of the following, post-paid, to the failings of both should be told in the same breath, unless H. hath special care o'er the God of Poetry and Tammany? April 11, 1877.

[For the Dispatch.]

"Yes, my son," said Mr. Fishkin, taking down the oil-can after he returned from church last Sunday morning, "petroleumthe word is derived from 'petra' (a rock) and oleuni' (oil), and does mean 'rockoil.' I always' like to hear you inquiring into these things. The fluid is a dangerous, highly inflammable "-. Just then a delicate stream of flame shot up from the kindlings into the can, and Mr. Fishkin took a seat in the back-yard. Young Fishkin sank quietly down behind the bureau, near which he had been conveniently standing, and the chemical lecture on the "fixed" oils was postponed until the investigation as to who placed the live coals under the ashes in the fire-place is concluded.

If sea water, having its usual constituents should penetrate through a cavity in the earth to a depth where it would meet high temperature and metallic sulphides, the conditions would be present for forming petroleum.-M. Byasson.
